Dean had come to the Scottish Highlands for a change of scenery and some welcome isolation, but in the Loch beside his new home he finds company he could never have imagined. After making a fool of himself attempting to save a gorgeous man from drowning on his doorstep, Dean finds a welcome companion in the cheeky and otherworldly Fin. Never straying far from the mysterious, pristine waters of the Loch, Fin quickly becomes a constant fixture in Dean's life and his bed. So wrapped up in his newfound happiness and handsome lover, Dean almost fails to notice the strange quirks and behaviours that follow Fin wherever he goes; uncommonly sharp teeth and nails, disappearing for days on end, a preference for swimming even in the coldest temperatures, and eyes more animal than human... By the time Dean realizes that myths and legends don't just exist in books he may be more invested in his lover's secret than either of them would ever have dreamed.
